Re: North Cache Conveyance Project by the Bridger-Teton National Forest

To Whom It May Concern:

While officially a decision on this project still is pending, evidence will likely prove that the decision to sell land on the Bridger-Teton administrative site on North Cache in Jackson, Wyoming was predetermined by your agency. Moreover, evidence will likely prove breach of other procedural and legal requirements for this project, its sale and redevelopment. That evidence, however, is largely under your agency's control. Accordingly, you are on notice to preserve all such evidence in anticipation of litigation.

This notice includes, but is not limited to, any and all internal letters, drafts, memos, e-mails, employee comments, public comments, your records and catalogs of such comments, meeting notes, calendar entries, time sheets, invoices, records of payment, synopses, interpretations, analysis and work product that you produced or received that in any way relate to this project, any and all communications, whether written, verbal or otherwise, between you and any other federal office, agency or official, between you and any local, state, and federal elected or appointed officials or employees, between your own employees, and between you and any member of the public in any way related to this project. This notice includes any and all evidence in your possession that possibly can be construed as relevant to this project and any future litigation, whether you deem that it is discoverable or not.

Dear Sir:

While officially a decision on this project still is pending, evidence will likely prove that the actual decision to sell land on the Bridger-Teton administrative site on North Cache in Jackson, Wyoming was predetermined by your agency. Moreover, evidence will likely prove breach of other procedural and legal requirements for this project, its sale and redevelopment. That evidence, however, is largely under your agency's control. Accordingly, you are on notice to preserve all such evidence in anticipation of litigation.

This notice includes, but is not limited to, any and all internal letters, drafts, memos, e-mails, employee comments, public comments, your records and catalogs of such comments, meeting notes, calendar entries, time sheets, invoices, records of payment, synopses, interpretations, analysis and work product that you produced or received that in any way relate to this project, any and all communications, whether written, verbal or otherwise, between you and any other federal office, agency or official, between you and any local, state, and federal elected or appointed officials or employees, between your own employees, and between you and any member of the public in any way related to this project. This notice includes any and all evidence in your possession that possibly can be construed as relevant to this project and any future litigation, whether you deem that it is discoverable or not.
